August Comte, the founding father of Sociology once said that Sociology is the 'Queen of all Sciences'. He justified his own statement in several ways and thus gradually Sociology has got a permanent place in peoples' hearts and also in academia in both the global north and south or to be more specific in developed and developing countries.

- Sociology as an interdisciplinary discipline is offered as both an Honours and General course in the CBCS undergraduate curriculum. The subject deals primarily with 'homo sapiens' or human beings, who are social beings also. And thus sociology at the undergraduate level aims honestly to offer an insight to study society and its people.
- The honours and general course in sociology enables human individuals to think critically and develop sociological imagination that can make one realize that the everyday routine activities of life are also worthy of studying. This course also aims to instil in students the basic social values, their significance as well as the historic and cultural specificities of numerous social issues and events. After completion of this course, students can have a clear understanding of the society they live in, the systems they should follow or even the structures and processes they should change.
- Through this course young women of our college will learn to distinguish between commonsensical knowledge and sociology as well as this course can definitely enable students to combine theoretical and empirical knowledge and combine them to deal with social problems by finding the appropriate solutions.
- The B.A. honours and general course in Sociology can lead students towards conducting significant research in diverse interesting and productive areas that can expand the horizons of the discipline itself.
- After completing the course young students will possess rich heritage of sociological knowledge (about social structures, processes, institutions etc. and many more) from both national and global origins. Significant contributions of different scholars will not only increase the knowledge base of the students but will also motivate them to learn, work and achieve more.
